That there is any friction or disruption in the national guard of Hawaii other than a general lack of interest following the summer camp and period of field instruction, is denied by those connected with the citizen-soldiery of the island. Lack of an arory is given by all as the reason for this slump.

"If there is apathy in militia affairs it is because the guard lacks an armory," said Captain W. H. John son, inspector-instructor this morning. "As to my own connection with the national guard of Hawaii, I am still on the job, but have other duties now which attach me to department headther quarters. In fact, I was shooting with the guards men on the Kakaako range yesterday, and have every intention of carrying on the work that I have been doing with them for the past year. By War Department orders, however, I have been detailed as officer in charge of militia affairs of the Department of Hawaii, and as such am attached to these hemiquarters."
